

ROSS ROWLAND

I spend my days helping those who have been injured as a result of negligence access the medical treatment / interventions that they need, obtain appropriate compensation and, ultimately, rebuild their lives following serious injury. Obviously, a large part of my job involves considering legal culpability for accidents, which includes considering why / how things have gone wrong and whether all necessary steps had been taken to reduce risks to lowest possible levels (with reference to all relevant legislation, regulations, internal documents and policies).

I have lived the majority of my life in East Kent, having grown up in the village of Barham (a stone's throw from the school). I now live in Faversham with my wife and two daughters, aged 6 and 3.

Prior to having children, I was the third (development) XV captain at Canterbury Rugby Club and remain a keen supporter of the club and wider Kent rugby community.
